Narrow gauge inspiration in New Zealand

By Peter Sims

Sitting in the back of a narrow gauge train, I was struck by the sense of being in a different world. The train was a small, single-deck, diesel-hauled carriage, and the track was a narrow gauge, a relic of the early days of the railway. The train was moving through a lush, green landscape, and the scenery was beautiful. The train was a small, single-deck, diesel-hauled carriage, and the track was a narrow gauge, a relic of the early days of the railway. The train was moving through a lush, green landscape, and the scenery was beautiful.

The Great Wall of China is one of the most famous landmarks in the world. It is a long, winding wall that stretches across northern China, built by various dynasties over centuries.

The wall was built to protect the Chinese Empire from invasions by nomadic tribes from the north. It is a symbol of Chinese civilization and a testament to the engineering and organizational skills of ancient China.

the 1990s, the number of people with a diagnosis of schizophrenia has increased by 20% (Meltzer 1998).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The World Health Organization (WHO) has developed a 'recovery approach' to mental health care, which focuses on the individual's strengths and abilities, rather than on their symptoms and deficits (WHO 1998). This approach is based on the idea that people with mental health problems can lead meaningful and fulfilling lives, and that they should be given the opportunity to do so. The recovery approach is a holistic approach, which takes into account the individual's physical, psychological, social, and spiritual needs. It is a person-centred approach, which means that the individual is at the centre of the care plan, and that the care is tailored to their needs and preferences.

The recovery approach is a relatively new concept, but it has gained widespread acceptance in the mental health community. It is a positive and hopeful approach, which focuses on the individual's strengths and abilities, rather than on their symptoms and deficits. Bumps in the road

BY JAMES MURPHY

THE ROAD TO THE future is not always smooth. It is a road that has been paved with the bones of the past, and it is a road that is still being built. The road is long and winding, and it is full of bumps and potholes. But it is a road that leads to a better future, and it is a road that we must all travel. The road is not perfect, but it is the best we have. It is a road that we must all travel, and it is a road that we must all build. The road is long and winding, and it is full of bumps and potholes. But it is a road that leads to a better future, and it is a road that we must all travel. The road is not perfect, but it is the best we have. It is a road that we must all travel, and it is a road that we must all build.
